Lantern 4194-3 "Salesianergasse"

The Biedermeier Family

As a simple and unpretentious lantern this fixture is a typical example of the Biedermeier-era. The frame is made of brass bars carefully soldered to form the closed cage. This is then artfully polished and finished according to specifications. Many different finishes are available. The glass is fixed with small brackets which make even replacement of broken glasses easy. Based on this design many alternatives are possible such as wall lanterns or versions with closed top for outside applications.
